[illegible] of the metropolis of Oregon with [illegible] "Inland Empire" of the northwest by rail[illegible] of no small importance to the citi[illegible] the people of the state of Ore[illegible]

[illegible] gentleman who has just pre[illegible] referring to the time when, and the [illegible] he came to our state, my own re[illegible] back to the time just twenty [illegible] came to Oregon, crossing the con[illegible] was then for thousands of miles [illegible] wilderness. There was not at [illegible] of the Missouri river a mile of rail[illegible] short road, about ten miles east of [illegible] motive power of which was a mule, [illegible] by the O. S. N. Co. as a portage [illegible]

[illegible] last April, I had the honor of [illegible] at the breaking of ground at [illegible] the Oregon Central railroad, and [illegible] said on that occasion in substance: [illegible] bound in our common country by [illegible] stronger than hooks of steel [illegible] Central Pacific railroads hasten[illegible] completion," and in the beautiful [illegible] another before the close [illegible] horse will mingle at one run the [illegible] with the spray of both oceans. [illegible] work is completed, San Francisco [illegible] will be nearer together than San [illegible] Portland, the commerce of the At[illegible] will be bound together and the [illegible] stretches and the mountains it [illegible] from nature's solitude to the whirl [illegible] advancing civilization passing over [illegible] in a continuous stream. A [illegible] important enterprise to the state is the [illegible] railroad, connecting the great lakes [illegible] destined to be the great thorough[illegible] the continent. Over it the Chinese ca[illegible] hundred millions of inhabitants [illegible] commerce. When these great enter[illegible] completed, a tide of immigration from all [illegible] of the union is sure to set in for [illegible] Not alone restless adventurers to [illegible] having no interest in the coun[illegible] hardy sons of toil to establish homes [illegible] and their families."

[illegible] disappointment, of hopes deferred, of [illegible] have passed since then, years in [illegible] during our great resources and our [illegible] climate, every industry languished. But [illegible] foresight, the faith and the energy of [illegible] and the confidence and support of [illegible] change has come over us. [illegible] industry of our commonwealth has been [illegible] into new life. Our prosperity is assured [illegible] the tide of immigration is setting in upon [illegible] great "Inland Empire" of the northwest [illegible] to have been rediscovered in the dis[illegible] adaptability to agricultural pursuits. [illegible] instead of being a way station between [illegible] two great transcontinental railroads, [illegible] for the time at least, the terminus of [illegible] Portland is this day connected with [illegible] line of railroad stretching away [illegible] hundred and thirteen miles to [illegible] over which the fertile valleys of the north [illegible] pour their wealth at her feet. [illegible] your presence, has been driven the last [illegible] unites the city of Portland with the [illegible] lines of the Oregon Railway & Navigation [illegible] the Northern Pacific Railroad, and [illegible] will be driven the last spike that shall [illegible] with the great railroad system of [illegible] will begin to pour into the state [illegible] of immigration as has never been wit[illegible] portion of the union. As I [illegible] upon the completion of the North[illegible] the completion of the Oregon & [illegible] connecting the two great cities of the Pacific coast. Who shall attempt to prophesy what the next [illegible] years will bring forth.

I am satisfied that the most sanguine do not yet fully comprehend our future. I firmly believe that no portion of the Union, and perhaps no portion of the earth, possesses such a combination of advantages as this northwest country, and where else does labor bring such a sure and bountiful reward as here. Our fertile soil, our mineral wealth, our forests of timber, and more than all, the mildness of our winters, which so greatly lessen the cost and labor of agricultural pursuits, are sure to attract in the near future a great population to our state. In wealth and population this country will at no distant day surpass New England. The principal agent which is to bring this great population to our borders, which is to develop our resources and to furnish our fertile valleys the means of transportation, in short, which is to infuse the life current into every industry of the country, is the railroad.

Fellow citizens, as a citizen of the state interested in her development, as a citizen of Portland, interested in its prosperity, I mingle my congratulations with yours upon the auspicious event of this hour.

Three cheers were then proposed by Gen. J. W. Sprague, and given with a will. Personal congratulations followed.

The party then returned to the cars and proceeded down to the falls, where a halt of ten minutes was made. Then they enjoyed an excellent luncheon en route home, and reached here at 1:20 P. M.

THE ROAD.

Forty miles is the distance from Albina to Bonneville, and the road is as substantial as money and good engineering could build. It is well ballasted, there are no sharp curves, and the motion of the train was extraordinarily easy. Everything is substantial and the company and the officers in charge of construction may boast with justice of their achievement. Westward the maximum grade is 26 feet to the mile, and eastward 53 feet, but for a short distance only. Inability of the saw mills to furnish lumber for the terminus at Albina will somewhat delay opening of the road for traffic, but regular trains will be put on within three weeks.

THE BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

A Scandal relating to the Scheme which it is Claimed will Size Up with the Tweed Steal.

The Chicago Times gives the following history of the Brooklyn bridge scandal: The Brooklyn bridge trustees are under fire, and the World, which has shotted for guns, declares that "Nothing so suspicious, nothing so redolent of fraud and corruption, as" the transactions of the ring "has been disclosed to the public of the city in connection with its corporate affairs since the downfall of William M. Tweed." The bridge is not yet completed. The original estimate of the cost of construction made by the chief engineer, now dead, who has been succeeded by his son, was $11,000,000. Already $22,000,000 have been expended on account of it, and no man can say when the job will be finished. In the face of official obstinacy and opposition, a New York journal made an examination of the books of the enterprise, and charges that these are full of forgeries, misrepresentations and errors in calculations, and that they are confused and complicated in a manner which, in the books of a private concern would excite suspicion and provoke legal inquiry and action. So far as it was able to trace the matter, but $4,500,000 of the $22,500,000 said to have been expended on this work went for material, which was the most costly item in the construction. The contracts let are in a maze of suspicion. Not only was the highest bidder for material the one to whom an award was made, but subsequently contracts were made with him at prices higher than were proposed by himself. And a tracing of the associations of the successful bidders usually discloses a bridge trustee as the party interested. The company for the construction of the bridge was organized in 1867 with Tweed and William M. Kingsley as incorporators. Henry C. Murphy was then president of the company, and has remained such from that time forward. But it was not the scheme of the incorporators to have it remain a company operated by private capital. A law was passed authorizing the cities of Brooklyn and New York to subscribe to the capital stock of the concern, and issue bonds for that purpose. When Tweed was a prisoner under examination, he testified that he paid $55,000 or $65,000 to the president of the New York board of aldermen in consideration of the passage of an ordinance subscribing one and one-half millions to the bridge company and placing municipal bonds to that amount in the hands of the company. As the law then was the private subscribers to the stock controlled the affairs of the company, the municipalities having nothing to say. Tweed only made a first small payment on 500 shares of the bridge company's stock. The subsequent payments were taken care of by Kingsley, the vice president of the company, who had been voted a commission of 15 per cent. upon all purchases of material, etc.

In 1875 the two municipal corporations assumed control of the work, which had come practically to a standstill, but they continued the old organization, retaining Murphy as president of the board and counsel for the trustees, Kingsley as vice president, and the old set of engineers. The opinion was then entertained that the structure might be completed in a very few years, not to exceed three, and at a cost of not more than $10,000,000. If the municipal officers at that time were honestly desirous of witnessing the prompt completion of the work with economical expenditure, they made a mistake in retaining any of the persons originally connected with the enterprise. They may have presumed that the chief officers of the cities being ex-officio trustees, they would have a certainty of such representation on the board as would prevent improper domination of the old management; but ex-officio officers are generally dummies. They may or may not attend stated meetings, and are not likely to know anything more of the workings of a corporation than may be gleaned from perfunctory reports.

At present, however, Mayor Low and Mayor Grace, with the comptrollers of their respective cities are in an aggressive mood; but their action has been looking more particularly toward the completion rather than the cost of the work. Mr. Low has desired to have the chief engineer retired to the position of consulting engineer on the ground that he is continually ill and incapable of giving costly attention to his duties. The Murphy-Kingsley interest in the board of trustees defeated this suggestion. Under the spur of the exposure made by the World, the municipalities will probably insist upon going to the bottom of this stupendous job, and if they cannot do it by their own accountants, the aid of the grand jury may be, and certainly ought to be, invoked.

Married Women as Teachers.

New York Herald.

Is it not about time for an end of the nonsensical custom of dismissing feminine teachers from their schools as soon as they marry? This custom is steadily robbing our common schools of able teachers whose places are not very easily filled, while it does the schools no benefit in any manner. Married women, who have large household and family cares should not be in the school room, nor is it likely that any of them would be there if they could; but the young married woman, lately a teacher, who has so little to do that time hangs heavily on her hands, would be better off, physically and mentally, more interesting to her husband and more useful to the world, if she were to spend six or seven hours per day in her old class room. Experience in teaching comes slowly. Any bright girl may be able to listen to the recitations of memorized lessons, but to develop young minds according to their capacities, to maintain discipline without recourse to severity and bad temper, are faculties that must be sought in composed minds. Why, then, should the teacher be banished as soon as her mind has been settled as to the one subject which generally is uppermost and of a disturbing nature while she is single?

He reported the fact to the police, and from the description given of a man who had been loitering in and about the premises, suspicion rested on one Charley Williams. Officer Hough went to the St. Nicholas hotel, where he found his man and charged him with the robbery. Williams suddenly drew a cocked revolver and presented it at the head of the officer, threatening to shoot, and it was only with the greatest difficulty and the assistance of several people that the prisoner was disarmed. Eventually he was taken by [illegible], where, on being searched, it was found he had some $12 in his possession; amongst the money being coin which Mr. Leslie may identify.

A Change of Views.

Pomeroy (W. T.) Republican.

One month ago the majority of journals published in this territory were outspoken in their hopes that J. P. Mitchell might be the next senator from Oregon. They doubtless were honest in their advocacy of his claims. They perhaps knew little of the man save that his work while in the senate gave them hope that his election at this time would be favorable to our interests. This paper, with its mite of wisdom, was sincere in its wishes that the Oregon legislature would substitute Mitchell for the weak and decrepit Grover, who has done little for himself and less for his people while occupying the responsible position of U. S. senator. We have watched the contest with interest because our future is so closely linked with that of Oregon that we might as well be as one. From our personal knowledge, we regret to admit that we believe many of the charges made against Mitchell are only too true. It cannot be denied that his party has at least once suffered defeat at the polls for endorsing him. And when we consider the high standing and honesty of such republicans as Davenport, Ford, Gilbert, Waldo and others who are opposing him, and also the fact that by some peculiar circumstance a few democrats have experienced a change of heart, it is but natural that a candid man should change his opinion and hopes. The senate is supposed to represent the ability and dignity of our country; and not less, only the purest and most conscientious of our great statesmen should compose that body to which we should look with such respect.

We are but candid when we say that as much as we desired the election of Mitchell, we now hope the republican party of Oregon will do itself the credit to send one of the many good men it might select instead of one who is acknowledged, by his friends, to be anything but a fair representative of their influential and growing state.

The Texas Rangers.

Houston Post.

The Texas rangers have done more to suppress lawlessness, capture criminals, and prevent Mexican and Indian raids on the frontier, than any other agency. They are employed and paid by the state government. Nearly all are young men. They are enlisted for a year, and are required to provide themselves with a horse, saddle and bridle, a repeating Winchester rifle, and a navy revolver. The state furnishes rations and pays $30 a month for each private. They wear no uniform. Each man dresses as his taste or the condition of his finances may dictate; but they all wear broad brimmed sombreros. Considering their small numbers, less than 200, they have rendered remarkable service. They are brave, reckless, hardy fellows, swear with great proficiency and shoot unerringly.

Northern Pacific Railroad Earnings.

The approximate gross earnings for the month of August were as follows:

Eastern divisions	$611,500 30	Road miles	931
Western division	115,877 00	" "	367
Total	$727,377 00		1,298

First two months this year	$1,196,647 00
First two months last year	637,366 80

A First Class Reputation.

Philadelphia Record.

Another ill omened name crops again to the surface—John Hipple Mitchell. His name is really John Mitchell Hipple, but on removing to Oregon from Pennsylvania when the state was young he changed it for reasons not altogether without reference to the criminal courts. Hipple Mitchell is to be a republican United States senator from Oregon if a party caucus can control the solid strength of the party vote. But there exists a strong probability that a sufficient number of republicans in the Oregon legislature are disposed to resent the caucus dictation which saddled upon their shoulders so unclean a vessel as Hipple Mitchell, still red hot of railway jobbery and the fumes of the lobby.

Fame beyond the State.

Sacramento Record-Union.

That is a lively campaign they have up in Oregon. A leading paper at Portland asks one of the leading candidates for an exalted position twenty questions. Among these he is asked to confess to seduction, forced marriage, concubinage, elopement, bigamy, change of name, bribery, groundless divorce, corruption, debauchery, bad example, lack of manly conduct, and so on. Then it winds up by warning the candidate that it won't do to respond, "You are a liar," and that it, the journal, holds itself financially and legally responsible for calling the candidate all the names it does, and for charging him with all manner of crimes.

The Pennsylvania Outlook.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—A gentleman who has just made a tour of every county in Pennsylvania for political purposes, brings a report here which will not be encouraging to the stalwart leaders of Pennsylvania, or to any who hope for the continuance of the rule of "Cameronism" in that state. The gentleman says: "I have known Pennsylvania for years. I have never seen such an exhibition of hostility to Cameron rule as there exists there to-day. It is perfectly surprising. Wherever I went, whether in the mines or in the counting rooms, there was the same sentiment expressed everywhere."

But He is Not Yet Elected.

Philadelphia Times.

The nomination of John Hipple Mitchell for United States senator by the republican members of the Oregon legislature was foreshadowed and therefore will create no surprise, but that it is a wise nomination no one believes. His record in the past, both public and private, is decidedly bad and his election will not add to the character or reputation of the republican wing of the senate. He belongs to a class of statesmen who having been once retired from public life ought to have no resurrection.

A QUESTION OF VERACITY.

Senator Waters Reiterates his Denial of the Bribery Charge.

REPEATING OTHERWISE GILBERT'S STORY.

A Curious Coincidence in all the Main Facts of Meetings, Conversations and the State of Salem Postoffice Affairs.

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE OREGONIAN.

The investigating committee met yesterday pursuant to adjournment and continued the examination of Senator Waters in reference to the charges of bribery made against him by the Hon. A. N. Gilbert, representative from Marion county.

CROSS EXAMINATION BY MR. THOMPSON.

Q. Mr. Waters, if I understood correctly, you made a remark last night before the committee which was not taken down by the clerk, to this effect, that previous to the conversation on the 26th of September, Gilbert had told you that he didn't want the Salem postoffice. Is that correct?

A—That was correct.

Q—Gilbert, in stating the contents of the note which he says he received from you, states the contents to be "when and where can I see you." Was that a full statement of the contents of the note or was anything else contained in it?

A—That is substantially what was in it.

Q—The note, then, did not contain any information concerning the reason why you desired to see Mr. Gilbert.

A—It did not.

CROSS EXAMINATION BY MR. JAMISON.

Q—What relation, if any, exists between yourself and Mr. Crossman, or between your families?

A—Mr. Crossman's wife is my niece and my wife was Mrs. Crossman's cousin.

Q—What reason had you for believing that in the event of the Polk county delegation supporting Mitchell that they could control patronage of Salem postoffice?

A—I never said I believed it. The point was that if Mitchell was elected the Salem delegation could control the Salem postoffice; that Mitchell would undoubtedly listen to the people of Salem.

Q—What led you to believe that in the event of the Polk county delegation voting for Mitchell, the Marion delegation could control patronage of the Salem postoffice?

A—I did not believe that the vote of the Polk county delegation would be the real cause of the Marion county delegation being able to control the postoffice. I believed that the Marion county delegation or the leading citizens of Salem could control that matter in the event of Mitchell's election, for the reason that there had been a great deal of trouble about the Salem postoffice within the last few years.

Q—Did you ever at any time within the last six months have any talk with Senator Mitchell in regard to the disposal of the patronage of the Salem postoffice?

A—I had.

Q—Will you state the substance of that conversation?

A—I think it was in Portland, about the political situation in Marion county. I stated to Mr. Mitchell that I was satisfied that the political trouble in Marion grew out of the trouble about the postoffice, and that I believed that the best way to settle that matter was to allow the leading citizens of Marion county to name the postmaster. Mitchell informed me that if he should be elected he would be willing to do so.

Q—Do I understand you to say that you told Gilbert that if he would support Mitchell and influence the Polk county delegation to support him that the Salem postoffice was at his disposal?

A—I did not so state.

Q—In your cross-examination you state that Gilbert said he did not want the Salem postoffice. State the conversation that brought out his refusal to accept that postoffice.

A—In our first conversation, on or about the 24th of September, I stated to Gilbert that if your Marion county delegation will stand in with the majority, or words to that effect, you can undoubtedly control that postoffice. Gilbert replied that as far as he was concerned he would not have it. I then said the delegation can then recommend a friend and have him appointed.

Q—Have you at any time since the commencement of this legislative session had any conversation with Captain Scott, the present postmaster, relative to his leaving the office and making room for some other person, and, if so, what were the considerations offered him for doing so?

A—I had a conversation with Captain Scott, in which he informed me that he was willing to resign at any time if it would heal up all trouble and dispute about the office. No consideration whatever was mentioned.

Q—What led you to believe that, in the event of Mitchell's election to the senate, that you would receive the appointment of U. S. marshal?

A—I didn't say I believed it.

Q—(by Mitchell)—Senator Waters, have I ever at any time made any promise to you, directly or indirectly, that in case of my election to the U. S. senate I would recommend your appointment for the office of U. S. marshal of this state or for any other office whatever?

A—You never did.

Q—(by Mitchell)—Have I ever authorized you, directly or indirectly, to make any promise for me, or for or on account of yourself, that in case of my election to the senate the postoffice in Salem should be given to any particular person or controlled by any particular person?

A—You never did.

Q—(by Mitchell)—Is this not the fact in reference to that matter. Have not you and others in my presence informed me at different times that the principal objection to me, as you understood it, by the Marion county delegation was on account of some federal appointments supposed to have been controlled by me while I was senator? Have I not invariably and always when these matters have been discussed, taken positive ground that I would not for the sake of an election either make a promise to any person in office that he should be retained in case of my election, or to any person out of office that he should be recommended by me in case of my election? Did I not state further that if elected, I proposed to be governed in these matters by what I conceived to be the wishes and recommendations of the leading representative republicans of the state, and that so far as the Salem postoffice was concerned that I knew there had been a great deal of trouble and illfeeling over that matter, and in case of my election I should be governed in that matter by recommendation of leading representative republicans of Salem? Is, or is it not, this a true statement of the position I have taken in regard to this whole business? If not, state wherein I have not stated the position fairly.

A—I have frequently heard Mr. Mitchell make such statements, which statements led me to believe what I told Mr. Gilbert, that the Marion county delegation, or the leading citizens of Marion county, could control the Salem postoffice in the event of Mitchell's election.

Q—(By Mitchell.) Did I ever at any time say to you, or to any person in your presence, or did I ever authorize you to say to any person, that in case of my election the delegation from Marion county or any portion of it should, to the exclusion of other leading citizens of Salem, influence me in making recommendations for the appointment of a postmaster at Salem? In what I have said on this subject has not my position been simply this, that if elected I would feel myself bound to be governed in that matter by the wishes of the leading republicans of Salem?

A—To the first question, Mr. Mitchell never authorized me to say anything about the Salem postoffice; to the second, yes.

Q—(By Thompson.) In using the words "leading republicans of Marion county" and the words "leading representative republicans of Marion county," did you understand Senator Mitchell to include those republicans of Marion county who are opposed to the caucus and the caucus nominee as well as those who favor the caucus and the caucus nominee?

A—I understood him to mean the leading republicans of Marion county regardless of any factions or cliques that may exist in Marion county politics.

Here defense rested, Mitchell announcing that he was ready to answer under oath any question the committee might see fit to ask.

Gilbert recalled and questioned by Jamison:

Q—State what family relation exists between you or your family and Mr. Crossman and his family?

A—Mr. Crossman and I married cousins.

Q—Are your connections as relatives and families agreeable and pleasant?

A—They are particularly so.

Q—When making the statement to Crossman was there any intention whatever on your part that it should become known to the public through him?

A—None whatever.

Q—Would you have made a statement of that kind to him had you not have considered him a very intimate personal friend of yours?

A—I should not.

THE ABORIGINES OF ALASKA.

LITTLE KNOWN OF THOSE IN THE INTERIOR.

The Indians the Dakota Excursionists Saw—Their Commendable Qualities and Dark Traits—The Missionaries—Metlakahtla.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE OREGONIAN.

The number of aborigines in Alaska is variously estimated from 30,000 to 50,000. With regard to those in the interior there is very meagre accurate knowledge. The obstacles in the way of a thorough understanding of the nature of this portion of the American possessions, and the number and character of the natives, are not great, either from the cost of outfitting an exploring party, danger from the natives or any other terrors incident to such an undertaking.

With a view of obtaining the desirable information intimated above, the commander of the military department in which Alaska is included asked, not long since, for a small appropriation to send an exploring party into the interior, there being those in the service fitted for the work who would gladly go on such a mission, and the government and public would be placed in possession of definite and reliable information that ought to be known. The appropriation of the money for this purpose failed, being antagonized by other branches of the government and by outside influence.

Those Indians that the Dakota excursionists saw are, compared with Indians elsewhere, an intelligent-looking people. In their handiwork, especially as exhibited by carvings in wood, stone and slate, their ornaments and shapely canoes, they display unlooked for skill. Blanketed natives, with painted or hideously besmeared faces, were to be seen. From a condition offensive to the nostrils and this scanty mode of dress there are various stages of approach to cleanliness and a civilized style of clothing; some, indeed, make a very presentable appearance. Sometimes Indians were observed affectionately fondling their children, and the men often carrying their offsprings in their arms with all the apparent pride of their white brethren. The women generally do the trading and bargaining in disposing of furs and in other transactions. When an Indian offers furs for sale, and the price has been arranged between him and the purchaser, his klootchman, or squaw, can veto the transaction, and has to be consulted before the trade becomes final. The Indians are never in a hurry to conclude a bargain, those from a distance often remaining at a trading post for weeks holding out for a most trifling advance on the price offered. They are shrewd traders, and the amounts agreed upon for the different kinds of furs seem very high to an uninitiated on-looker. The purchasers would lose money on the goods if they paid coin. The Indian's shrewdness manifests itself only in securing the promise of a high price. They do not want money, but desire articles out of the store. Their ignorance of what these cost the dealer, leaves them a prey to the most outrageous imposition from the more intelligent but less honest white trafficer.

These Indians are industrious, willingly embracing opportunities of earning money by working for it. If they are not a doomed race, by reason of liquor and contact with depraved whites preventing their reclamation from heathenism, in the coming development of the resources of Alaska they will be a valuable factor as "hewers of wood and drawers of water." They are quick to learn what is required of them.

Among the dark traits of these Indians is their belief in witchcraft, leading to cruel torturings and the death of supposed witches; holding of slaves, who are sometimes sacrificed at their great feasts; frightful orgies attending the cremation of the dead; the very general unchastity of the women. Cannibalism formerly was practiced, and is said yet to be occasionally indulged in. The missionary at Nanaimo told the writer that he had recently received a letter from a missionary upon the Nass river, who wrote of coming upon a party of cannibals feasting upon a human body. In Southeastern Alaska and the bordering territory of British Columbia the revolting displays of the deepest depravity that formerly held away has been greatly modified and kept in abeyance, but by no means done away with. When sufficient hoochenoo has been distilled by them, or otherwise obtained, to thoroughly intoxicate a large number, ghastly and terrible spectacles are again to be witnessed. As long as molasses or sugar can be procured by them in quantity they have the means of manufacturing a vile intoxicant.

Missionaries, both men and women, are laboring to reclaim these savages from barbarism. The field has not been occupied long enough by those now in Alaska for much to appear in the way of results. But the Indians are susceptible to the kindly offices of unselfish ministrations, and the missionaries are gaining their confidence and establishing an influence over them. At the white settlements, however, counter influences render their work well-nigh abortive. At these places it was the common thing to hear the work of the missionaries sneered at. They have also gotten the hatred of some traders, who claim that they interfere with their business, probably because they seek to protect their wards against a greed that amounts to theft. Whatever opinion may be entertained of the methods employed, or of the results of their work, a devotion that leads men and women of education and refinement into a dreary wilderness among degraded natives, with the object of bringing them under the beneficent influences of Christianity, calls for unstinted admiration.

THE INDIAN VILLAGE OF METLAKAHTLA.

In British Columbia, not a great distance from the Alaska border, one man was encountered who has accomplished the most marvelous results among the Tsimpsean tribes. His influence is felt long distances from his field of personal effort. His work demonstrates that there are methods and a consecration that can lift these Indians out of their savage state and make of them a civilized and thriving people. This man is Mr. Duncan, who arrived at Fort Simpson in the fall of 1857, where he continued to labor among and study the Indians for five years. He became convinced of the necessity of separating those over whom he had gained an influence from all contact with the heathen practices of their tribe. Fifty consented to accompany him, and they removed 50 miles down the coast and established a Christian village, which they named Metlakahtla. Residence in the village is made to depend upon conformity to the following regulations:

"To give up their 'ahlied,' or Indian deviltry; to cease calling conjurors when sick, to cease gambling; to cease giving away their property for display; to cease painting their faces; to cease drinking intoxicating drink, to rest on the Sabbath; to attend religious instruction; to send their children to school; to be cleanly; to be industrious; to be peaceful; to be liberal and honest in trade; to build neat houses; to pay the village tax."

Where in May, 1862, this man and his 50 followers were encamped in tents and rude structures, the Dakota excursionists found a prosperous community of about 1200 souls. The people live in neat, uniformly built houses. Standing in a square with streets on four sides is a handsome Gothic church, built by the Indian mechanics of the village, capable of seating over 1000 persons. The mission house is a large structure. Besides these, there is a well-stocked trade store, saw-mill, cannery, warehouses, workshops, etc., all carried on by the Indians. Around the bay are cultivated gardens and potato patches. The streets are paved [illegible] and lighted by street lamps. Strange Indians coming to trade or who are detained [illegible] any cause are welcomed and made comfortable. Mr. Duncan is a man of versatile talent, understanding to the least detail the several industries of the village, working with the Indians in their gardens, the carpenter shop, the saw-mill, cannery and [illegible] and superior judgment is seen [illegible] of the town.

Mr. Duncan's [illegible] was modest even to diffi[illegible] [illegible] by questions to conversation about the Indians and the eye would kindle, the [illegible] he would talk with the fervor of an enthusiast of their progress and the many noble Christian men and women among them. His object is to train up a community of cleanly, sober, industrious and self-reliant Indians, who will be an example [illegible] become the teachers of the various tribes of the North Pacific. Mr. Duncan, before going to British Columbia, was a layman in the Episcopal church in England, and a clerk in a commercial house. He has declined to accept orders in the church, believing that the use of vestments and other church ceremonies would not benefit the Indians. He also believes that they are not yet prepared to receive the sacrament of the Lord's supper, because of the superstitious significance that would attach to it. Mr. Duncan is a loyal churchman himself, and his position results simply from his knowledge of the habits of thought of the Indians. He adopts the most simple form of gospel preaching. Ill advised counsel from a bishop who visited the village, and who apparently thinks little of the welfare of the Indians and is a stickler for church ceremonies, has led to an attempt to establish a rival church at Metlakahtla. This contemptible action on the part of the church authorities is doomed to miserable failure. The Indians know and are devotedly attached to the man who has watched over them and guided their steps, and cannot be seduced from their allegiance. The whole village are with Mr. Duncan, excepting a few malcontents, whom he has had to punish for offenses at one time or another. The excursionists came away from Metlakahtla with the most hearty and enthusiastic admiration for an unobtrusive great man. They were correspondingly severe upon the man in the garb of a bishop who was then seeking to divide a united and happy community.

NEW ASPECTS.

A new feature is noted in the Mitchell programme. Aware now that the eighteen republicans will never vote for him, and convinced of the hopelessness of further efforts to obtain democratic support, some of the more desperate of the followers of the boss are talking of continuing the dead-lock until the close of the session. But this is the talk of that unsavory lobby which has disgusted all decent people ever since the session began, rather than of the members themselves. The latter, acting on their responsibility as representatives of the people, know that the cry of "Mitchell or nobody" is utterly untenable. When they are urged to prevent an election they cannot but ask what is to be gained by it. Certainly not a vindication by the triumphant election of Mitchell on a straight and distinct issue two years hence, or at any other time. The republicans might lose both senators then, but Mitchell would not be elected. His political day is ended. Now, therefore, unless he is greater than the republican party, it will be necessary to look further. If he is greater than the republican party, of course the party will perish as a consequence of its refusal to elect him in compliance with his demand.

But it is not unlikely that the party will survive his failure to push himself into the senate. Something else then is to be done. Members are taking this rational view of the case and acting accordingly. Yesterday Mr. Eakin, of Lane, following the example of Dr. Plummer, of Multnomah, ceased to vote for Mitchell. There are many others among the thirty-six who are fair-minded men, and who have been prepared from the first to move when the time should be ripe on a new line. We do not urge anything upon them; they will act in their own time and way, upon their own convictions of duty. Nor can there be a reasonable doubt that those members who have been making the most strenuous effort to elect Mitchell will take a practical and rational view of the situation. Fortunately there is more than one man. If the members cannot agree on a particular man they may agree on some other. Such agreement, it may safely be predicted, will be reached. Who the man will be it is needless to conjecture. The members of the assembly will find him.

From the first the eighteen have shown that they will not be captious about the matter. They have evinced a willingness to accept any one of a dozen prominent men; and further, they have said that the choice need not be restricted to those who have from time to time been voted for. Here is a wide ground on which they may be fairly met. Agreement is possible, because the conditions are easy and reasonable. Though there has been a sharp division on the proposition to elect Mitchell, in the adjustment upon a new basis there should be no fear of the triumph of one faction over another. For there has been only one cause of disagreement from the beginning; that out of the way there could hardly be further dispute. Almost any conceivable result, therefore, might be accepted as fairly satisfactory to all. It is evident that the accommodation must be made. The time when is now the problem.

RAILROADS IN MEXICO.

In Harper's Magazine for October there is an article upon "the railway invasion of Mexico," which may raise a feeling of uneasiness in the minds of holders of Mexican railway securities, of whom there are now large numbers in the United States. Geographically considered, Mexico is large enough and its products varied enough to afford employment to more miles of railway than it is likely soon to have completed. In point of area it is stated to be "larger than the combined territories of Great Britain, France, Spain and the entire German Empire." Mexico has a wide range of climate and "a physical conformation which enables her soils to yield the products of every climate and of every zone." She has mineral deposits of great richness. Her population is 10,000,000, and she has ten cities ranging from 25,000 to 250,000 inhabitants.

The railways now in progress or contemplation there aggregate 5000 miles, and if completed will cost from $125,000,000 to $150,000,000. These roads have no land grants, the state having no land to give away. Some of them are assisted by subsidies of $6500 a kilometer from the state, but under restrictions in regard to freight and passenger tolls such as in the long run will put them at a serious disadvantage in competition with the roads not thus hampered.

This restriction in tolls would result in a permanent annual discrimination against 1125 miles of subsidized road of nearly $3,000,000 a year, or to a sum which in three years would repay the state for the entire amount of the subsidy.

In regard to the future productiveness of the property the writer in question takes an unfavorable view. He calls attention to the aversion of the natives to work, to the antipathy of Mexicans to foreigners, and further, that the illiteracy of the people renders it impossible to settle any administrative or political question by discussion or the dissemination of information.

Agriculture is a poor dependence in a country where so much of the land must remain barren until irrigating works are constructed. The business of the railway already completed increases at the rate of only 5 per cent annually. It paid a dividend only after seven years' operation, although it had practically a monopoly of the entire foreign commerce of the country. Nor can the Mexican railways be expected to develop the country as the western states of this country have been. There is no inducement for the emigrant, no homestead, no fertile soil waiting to laugh with a harvest as soon as tickled with a plow. Besides, the high parts of Mexico are at a more elevated level above the sea than any in which civilized man has as yet been able to maintain himself with vigor; the fertile, low soil toward the coast is malarious and deadly. In short, it would seem that emigration could not be successful unless the railway corporations themselves should construct elaborate irrigating works along their lines and maintain them permanently. It is a significant fact, too, that Mexican capitalists have put no money into these enterprises.

S. J. T.—EXIT.

In a late number the New York Sun devoted three columns to the announcement of the retirement of its favorite statesman, Samuel J. Tilden, from politics. The Sun has been for Tilden against the world. It has been looked on as the oracle of his intentions, and hence its announcement of his retirement will be regarded as an official deliverance. It may be the more significant from its coincidence in time with the statements from so many sources that Mr. Tilden's health is failing rapidly, and even that his death cannot be a distant event.

The Sun's announcement is given mainly through the form of an interview with a distinguished ex-journalist and ex-official, Hon. John Bigelow, whose relations with Mr. Tilden have long been of the most intimate and confidential character. Mr. Bigelow's remarks are those of an ante-mortem eulogist. Mr. Tilden is set forth as a very great man, and the charge that he has been led on throughout his career by "ardent and insatiable ambitions" is warmly resented. On the contrary, "Mr. Tilden's life has been full of the proofs of his freedom from all merely personal ambition." His true title, according to Mr. Bigelow, is that of "The Great Decliner." Yet it would seem as though the most conspicuous failure of Mr. Tilden's life has been his utter inability to convince his intimate political friends—excepting Mr. Bigelow—that he meant what he said. Yet in all probability the Sun would not furnish Mr. Bigelow so free a use of its columns for the last, fullest and most peremptory withdrawal of Mr. Tilden from the ranks of candidates, now and in 1884, were it not tolerably certain that this particular denial "means business."

There are now 252 cotton mills in the south, with an actual invested capital of $41,241,450, and having 1,237,409 spindles, 20,609 looms, and 1931 sets of cards. There are several companies now being organized—one in Georgia with $1,500,000 capital—but these are not included in the estimate. It is safe to say that by the beginning of another year there will be over $45,000,000 invested in cotton factories in the southern states. Nearly every dollar of this vast sum has been invested since the close of the war, and more than one-third of it since 1880. There will be $100,000,000 invested in cotton manufacturing in the south within the next dozen years.

According to an article of Prof. Vose in the North American Review, the number of passengers carried by the railways of the United States is 375,000,000 a year, so that the average is about eight railway rides for each inhabitant. It is noteworthy that all but 800 of the 1200 passengers who were injured, and all but 200 of the 460 who were killed, were victims of their own carelessness, and not of any fault on the part of the transportation companies. In these statistics there are suggestions which the public should not disregard as to the precautions to be taken to prevent injury while traveling by rail.

The census reports are at last actually under way, and will fill thirty large volumes. From the progress thus far made it appears that the time will come for another census before the results of that last taken are before the public. That facts ascertained by government authority in 1880 should be still unattainable in 1882, does no credit to the gentlemen in charge of this great national undertaking. Yet, in several instances recently, all that could be got from Washington was the information that the information wanted had not yet been obtained by collating the various local reports.

Disclosure of the fact that the Salem postoffice has been offered for votes will start in the mind of the average lobbyist sundry alarming suggestions. Each man has been keeping his own secret as to the office he was to receive for his "services," yet here is a reminder that the offices have been offered, and many of them doubtless promised, to others than those who supposed they had the sole assurance of obtaining them. No doubt they have been promised over and over. In such circumstances what reason has the office seeker of the lobby to suppose he will even come by his own?

It is understood that a revised edition of the postoffice regulations has been issued, informing postoffice inspectors that their chief official duty is to attend to trading off the postoffices for votes in the legislatures to elect the "bosses" to the United States senate. Of course Ben Simpson is not the man either to disobey or resign. He must attend to official duty.

He is a poor friend and bad adviser to J. H. Mitchell, who talks of a dead-lock to the end of the session and no election. In such contingency Mitchell will not be before the next legislature at all. No one can go before the people to advocate the election of members of the legislature in his interest, and he and his ring well know it.

Generous Waters! To offer the Salem postoffice, and nobody knows how many other offices as boot with a cash consideration to bring about a result that would make him United States marshal agian! Here is one of the best efforts yet discovered of patriotic spoils-seeking.

Very properly the new asylum at Salem is to be prepared as speedily as possible for reception of the insane. The state has outgrown the necessity for continuing the contract system.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

No comment is necessary, but just see what a man can do when quiet is assured; Morse, who invented the telegraph, and Bell, who invented the telephone, had deaf mute wives.

The butler of Queen Victoria's household has a salary of $3500 and four assistants who do the purchasing of supplies and see that the widow is not cheated in weight and measures by the tradesmen.

The products of Texas for the year ending with August have been carefully computed by a Galveston journal at $97,880,453. Within the same period 1461 miles of railroad were built, at an estimated cost of $45,520,000.

A celebrated lawyer is credited with the remark that the three most troublesome clients he ever had were: A young lady who wished to be married, a married woman who wanted a divorce, and an old maid who didn't know what she wanted.

Mr. George Francis Train has made up his mind never to speak to an adult human being. It is suggested that he start a barber shop instead of wasting his golden silence upon the sparrows of Madison square.

England progresses; the mother land has enacted a law that enables a wife to exercise full control of the property, real and personal, acquired by her prior to marriage, as also her wedding gifts, her earrings and such legacies as may fall to her in good fortune.

Ex-Minister Comly has arrived from the Sandwich islands, and will soon be in Ohio. This is the gentleman of whom Mr. Hayes said, when he was asked to appoint any Pacific slope man who understood something about commerce, "No; I propose to appoint Comly. Why, he and I slept in the same bed!"

Spikes are dropping from the New York elevated railroads daily, to the detriment of those who are beneath. When it is not a spike it is a cinder, or a dash of oil, or a swash of water, or a paint pot, or some trifle of that sort. A brakeman was dropped a few weeks ago and foot passengers live in hopes of seeing a director mashed by the fall.

A Philadelphia observer has discovered that when $1 railway fare is paid 15 cents of it goes to the stockholders, 20 cents to the bondholders and 65 cents toward paying the cost of operating the road, being chiefly distributed among workingmen. This is a general computation which does not apply to every road, but is the average for all the roads in the country.

At their beautiful home in Fremont, Ohio, ex-President Hayes spends most of his time reading and writing in his library, and Mrs. Hayes delights in looking after her poultry yard and the elegant flower garden that adorns the lawn. They usually have some friends or relatives living with them, and transient visitors and sight-seers are always cordially welcomed.

The New York Sun labors through a column of nonparell to show that "the Blaine phœnix has arisen from the ashes, and Arthur is no more." To climax this terse conclusion the Sun says: "Chandler has done it." The prelude to this is that Chandler had betrayed Arthur's cause into the hands of Blaine, and that General Raum is a party to the plot to advance the interests of the Plumed Knight as against Arthur's aspirations to the presidency in 1884.

A better opportunity for the application of the homely old adage, "Do not count your chickens before they are hatched," was never given than in the case of the Bath, Me., lady who, when about to be married, cried piteously because her new home was to be near the steep bank of a river, down which bank her children might fall and in which river her children might be drowned. She has now been married more than fifty years and has never borne a child.

In the by-laws of a young ladies' "Pickwick Club," recently organized at Fort Worth, Texas, it is provided that gossiping shall be a punishable offense and that slang shall not be prohibited. The local editor who mentions the concern must be a member, for he says that, "as there is not funds enough in the treasury to defray the expenses of tea party prodigality, they propose to 'blow in' the old folks."

In Austria the American duel is getting to be common among drunken students. The two antagonists draw two balls, one white and one black. The one who gets the black ball is obliged to kill himself in any manner he may deem the most safe and comfortable within thirty minutes. Among these chivalric fellows there is a very general belief that but few Americans die except by the doom of the black ball of the duel.

Society people of New York are on the qui vive because two bishops and three rectors are to officiate at a wedding to be held there in October. Wouldn't it be just as well to have the contracting parties married by one isolated, solemn-visaged clergyman, instead of two bishops, and thus prevent all measly jokes about several "pawns" and many "(k)nights" and a "castle" or two, and "three kings," and all that sort of thing, with perhaps an innuendo about another "queen."

On August 20th, the old French flagship Muiron, carrying 24 guns, foundered off Toulon. This vessel was the very one upon which Napoleon Bonaparte embarked to return to France from his memorable expedition to Egypt at the close of the last century. The Muiron has for some years been used for the police service of the port. That the career of a vessel with the particular associations mentioned should have been finally closed on the very day that England planted her foot so firmly in Egypt, is regarded as a curious coincidence. The disaster is attributed to the vessel having been struck a few days before by lightning. She went down in five minutes. The small crew and the prisoners on board had a narrow escape.

A Stalwart Objection Removed.

Cincinnati Commercial, Rep.

The first objection the stalwarts have made to Blaine, when he was considered as a man with a political future, has been, up to the present date, that his own state was against him. We may say that such are not present appearances.

FROM THE CAPITAL.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE OREGONIAN.]

SALEM, Oct. 3.—10:30 P. M.—The Waters bribery business continues a subject of popular talk. On the main point at issue there is a direct contradiction between Waters and Gilbert, and so the matter rests as a question of veracity. The comparison of characters is admitted to be greatly to the advantage of Gilbert, and there is no doubt in the public mind here but that his story is true. In his cross-examination today, a full report of which has been sent, Waters admitted in a general sense all the important facts, except the charge that he offered Gilbert money. His talk with Mitchell about the Salem postoffice, and his talk with incumbent Scott were directly in line with the offer to Gilbert.

An unfortunate error occurred in my telegraphed report of last night, due to hasty telegraphing. Gilbert was made to say that he understood Waters to be speaking for Mitchell, when in fact he said that he considered Waters to be speaking for himself. Upon receipt of THE OREGONIAN this morning the mistake was discovered at once, and was charged by Mitchell himself to be a purposeful and vicious misreport of the testimony. His strikers took up the cry, and the investigating committee was prevailed upon to send a special message to the house in advance of their report, not yet made, to correct the mistake. The trouble originated in the telegraph office, as the following statement given me by the manager shows:

SALEM, Oct. 3.

To whom it may Concern.—In regard to an error in THE OREGONIAN'S Salem telegraphic report of yesterday's date, in which Hon. A. N. Gilbert was misreported in his testimony before the investigating committee, I deem it proper and but just to say that the copy as furnished this office by Mr. Holman, THE OREGONIAN'S correspondent, reads correctly, as compared with the committee's record. The mistake was an unfortunate accident of hurried operating at a late hour. The original copy on file in this office shows the truth of this statement.

WM. DUMANS, Manager
Western Union Tel'g Office, Salem.

The ballot to-day resulted as was expected. How it will stand to-morrow it is impossible to say. Only a few devoted dependants pretend to expect Mitchell's election. It is generally conceded that he is out of the fight so far as having any prospect for election. It is not thought, however, that he will admit himself beaten. He will, so his strikers assert, hold on as long as he has a vote, and it is thought that he has a following of about twenty who will dead-lock the ballot to the end of the session. It looks to-night as if this would be the result. A madder crowd than Mitchell's immediate friends would be hard to find. Threats of personal accountability and of mashing noses are freely circulated,—the empty-headed Mr. Gault being particularly loud mouthed in this regard.

A VERDICT OF MURDER.

The River Mystery Yet Baffles Definite Solution—No Clue Obtained.

Much confused speculation is yet rife as to a reasonable solution of the mystery connected with the discovery last week of the body of an unknown person in the river, with his throat cut. All efforts, however, seem as distant from a satisfactory result as when the matter was first made public. Many varying theories have been discussed with noticeable zest, but none appear of sufficient consequence to present in these columns. Since the body has been removed to the morgue many people have called to examine the remains. No recognition was claimed, however, by any of the visitors until last Saturday evening, when two well-dressed and intelligent women entered the morgue and asked permission to examine the body. A young man about 17 years of age was the only person present at the time in the coroner's office. He complied with their request and conducted them to the rear rooms. Considerable sensation was created by the behavior of one of the women, who immediately upon discovering the face of the dead man about whose demise clings such a mystery, clasped her hands excitedly and appeared deeply affected by the sight. The lad in attendance, noticing her emotion, inquired if she recognized the deceased, to which she replied affirmatively. After recovering somewhat from the shock, she explained that the man was an old acquaintance of hers, and that he at one time resided in San Francisco, and that he was known as Charley Epping. After other demonstrations of grief, she and her companion disappeared. The young man at the coroner's office had neglected to take the names of the visitors, and observing in one of the city papers that this oversight had been made, the women reappeared at the morgue last evening to present any information which they might possess concerning the identity of the man. Coroner Cooke was present at the time of their return and not being satisfied with her first examination, requested her to look at the remains again, directing her attention to the peculiar shape of the deceased's nose. She made the second examination and immediately determined that her former conclusion was erroneous, stating positively that deceased had never been an acquaintance of hers. Therefore the hope inspired by the woman's first statement was dispelled, and the mystery is as difficult of solution to-day, so far as the public knows, as when it first startled the community.

Judge Stearns gave orders yesterday to have the features of deceased photographed. The coroner's jury completed their investigation yesterday and rendered the following verdict:

"We, the jury in the above case, find that deceased came to his death at the hands of some person or persons unknown to this jury, and from the evidence we are satisfied in our own minds that a murder has been committed on board the steamer Queen of the Pacific, between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock on the night of September 18, 1882, on the Willamette river, Oregon, as the steamer was close to her dock."

LAKEVIEW ACADEMY.

The new academy building at Lakeview, county seat of Lake county, is nearly completed, and will be ready for occupancy November 1st, at which time Prof. H. S. Caldwell will open his school. This addition to eastern Lake is one of no small moment to that section of country at this time. The people of Lake and southern Grant counties have long been embarrassed by the disadvantage of having no noteworthy educational facilities, and this fact, known abroad, has actually had the effect to injure that country perceptibly. This institution of learning will doubtless equal any of that class of schools on the coast, and will add a material attraction to southeastern Oregon.

THE FAIR.

The Attendance this Week Undiminished—Large Influx from the Country.

The attendance at the Mechanics' Fair is undiminished. In fact, it increases in number from day to day. The efforts of Messrs. Honeyman and Raleigh to make the pavilion a place of pleasurable resort have not failed of the desired result. Although for the past day or two the weather has been anything but inviting, still the pavilion has been crowded nightly. The music of the 21st infantry band adds to the many great attractions, and combined with the hundreds of elegant and novel displays made by our enterprising merchants and business men, makes the Mechanic's Fair for 1882 an event long to be remembered. Thousands of people from all over the great northwest have visited the fair this year who have never done so before. All are highly pleased and express themselves as glad they came; they would not have missed it for any consideration. Thousands are still arriving, and the city presents a lively holiday appearance. The fair will continue all this week, and it is expected that the attendance between now and Saturday will be greatly augmented. It is stated by the management that there is a greater per cent. of increase in attendance of people from the interior than from the city proper.

Following are the musical programmes for to-day:

Matinee Programme.

PART I.

1. March—"Impetus"..........Wiegand
2. Overture—"Le cheval de Bronze"..........Auber
3. Waltz—"Thousand and One Nights"..........Strauss
4. Song—"My Own, My Guiding Star"..........Hood
5. Mazurka—"Bonvivant"..........Ragrand

PART II.

1. Selection—"Martha"..........Flotow
2. Waltz—"First Kiss"..........Lamothe
3. Serenade—"Don Pasquale"..........Donizetti
4. Polka—"The Two Jolly Trumpeters"..........Farlow
5. Galop—"Fiametta"..........Suppe

Evening Programme.

PART I.

1. March—"Fort Lafayette"..........Wiegand
2. Overture—"Pretty as a Picture"..........Catlin
3. Waltz—"Morgenblaetter"..........Strauss
4. Song—"The Lost Chord"..........Sullivan
5. Schottisch—"Conversation"..........Ringleben

PART II.

1. Grand National Medley..........Heinicke
2. Waltz—"Blue Violet"..........Coote
3. Aria—"Faire de Nelle"..........Rossini
4. Polka—"Mattie"..........Keller
5. Galop—"Hurricaine"..........Ferrazzi

H. SINSHEIMER'S

Elegant display of pianos and organs has attracted the greatest attention from very beginning of the fair. His exhibit is made in the main gallery where one always finds an admiring throng surrounding his stand listening to the grand strains of music from the renowned Decker & Sons' pianos for which he is sole agent. It is said there are no better pianos made than the Decker & Sons', and Mr. Sinsheimer is doing a large trade in them with all classes of people in Oregon. His display of other celebrated instruments is very fine. Besides the Decker & Sons' pianos he also exhibits the Behr Bros. & Co.'s and Hardman & Co.'s pianos and Mason & Hamlin and Standard organs. Mr. Sinsheimer first established here in 1862 and has steadily grown in favor with the people of Oregon since he first opened for business. His display cannot fail to be appreciated as it is superior and will strike all visitors as being very handsome. At his store, No. 169 First street, one can see a greater variety of the fine instruments than are displayed at the fair.

A. ANDERSON & CO.,

The popular job printers, stereotypers and binders, make the handsomest display in this line we have noticed at the fair. Their exhibit is located in the main hall just to the left of the main entrance. They display very creditable label printing, very artistic job printing, beautiful samples of stereotyping, etc. We had occasion to visit their establishment at 196 Front street, where we learned for the first time that they were preparing to go into the lithographing business very extensively. They have all their stock on hand for that purpose and will commence work in that line very shortly. They have a very fine lot of stones on hand, from the smallest to the largest, and are fully prepared to do the most excellent work in that line. A competent corps of artists are already engaged and they will soon commence receiving orders.

FURRY'S WAGON IMPROVEMENT

In gearing continues to attract much attention and is considered by all mechanics as being very important. All who are interested in wagoning should see and examine it. It is displayed in the west end of the extension gallery, where Mr. Furry will be found every evening, and who will explain the workings of his invention to all.

THAT CRICKET MATCH.

PORTLAND, Oct. 3.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

I have read with much interest, first, your report of the cricket match between the Portland cricket club and a team from the vessels in our port, and second, the criticism which appears in your issue of to-day. I believe in the old saying, "Honor to whom honor is due," and as I am not intruding on your repertorial department, I would like to say something about the match under discussion.

The match, at the special request of the Portland club, was made twelve men on a side, and according to the score book, was won by the tars by four runs and eight wickets. Where all did so well it would be invidious to mention names, and passing over the "magnificent" fielding of the Portland twelve, I may be pardoned in saying that seldom have the lovers of the game here seen better wicket keeping, bowling, fielding or batting than that of Messrs. Cook, Fenton, Milne and Fowles respectively of the mercantile marine twelve. The fielding of the tars as a whole was far ahead of what we are in the habit of seeing here, as anyone who either saw the match, or with a knowledge of the game, examines the score and takes due note of the extras made on each side, will at once admit.

And now for the Old Cricketer. In your issue of to-day he says the match ended in a draw. Unfortunately, however, for his statement, the books kept by the scorer will show that the Tars scored in the first innings 93 and in the second 41 for three wickets, against 60 and 70 of the Portland club, thus winning by four runs and eight wickets. "Old Cricketer" also seems to forget that in a one day match, should any circumstance intervene to prevent the completion of the game, the result of the first innings decide who are the victors. Assuming therefore, for the sake of argument, that the second inning was not completed, then the Tars were the victors by 33 runs on the first inning.

FAIR PLAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

In your paper of to-day there appears a letter having reference to last Saturday's match. As the matter has been brought forward, we may as well have it put right. The scores obtained were by Portland, 60 and 70, and by the Tars, 93 and 41 for three wickets, so that we won by 4 runs and 8 wickets, not 7 wickets as reported on Monday. We are deeply grateful to "Old Cricketer" for his sympathy, but we may mildly say that we don't want any of it from anyone. All we ask when playing cricket, or any other game, is a fair field and no favor, and when we lose we shall never attempt to get out of our position by inglorious excuses. If the Portland players are still unconvinced we shall be happy to play next Saturday, day weather, eleven Tars vs. sixteen (16) of the Portland club. Yours respectfully,

"THE TARS."

With its jagged peaks the horizon [illegible]

See on the edge of the waters [illegible]
[illegible] far flashing [illegible] Perim's Strait
Glitters and grows as the ship [illegible]
Fast on its course for the Exile's gate

And onward still to the broadening ocean
Out of the narrow and perilous seas
Till we [illegible] with a large and [illegible]
In the moist soft air of the Indian breeze

And the Southern Cross like a standard [illegible]
Hangs in the front of the tropic light
But the Great Bear sinks like a hero [illegible]
And the Polar star lowers its signal light

And the round earth rushes toward the morning
And the waves grow paler and wan the foam
Misty and dim with a glance of warning
Vanish the stars of my Northern home

Let the wide waste sea for a space divide me
Till the close coil'd circles of time unfold
Till the stars rise westward to greet and guide me
When the exile ends and the years are told

BETWEEN TWO CITIES.

Portland to Mexico

I

There are fairer skies no doubt and warmer suns than those of Oregon but though I have crossed the continent in this summer land from the Pacific to the Gulf, I have not seen a pueblo that will bear comparison of any features that make a place attractive, with the pretty little city of Portland prettier than ever the day I said good bye to the home and friends I had found there

All that last week of July the rain had fallen with a gentleness only known in our northwest and now in the early August morning there was no longer a memory of the hot dry dust of the past month The surrounding forests were clad in a fresh glory and the hill slopes were brilliant with new verdure The town nestled in a lap of beauty fragrant with the breath of that summer morning The lawns and gardens of the statelier houses the vines and flowers clustering in modest dooryards all in the atmosphere of home, seemed covered with an expression of singular tenderness when I passed them for the last time. How lovingly all inanimate life gives the heart whatever it asks

If I had met a man that morning I should have been disturbed; would have turned down another street rather than hear a human grating voice or perhaps would have met and caned him if he had ventured to speak to me I was grateful that men could sleep in the early morning I tossed my goodbyes in at the windows of my friends, sure of getting no response but an unheard snore, and marched away to the still music of the grass and flowers and tender memories. All systems are the subjects of their inevitables

[That shall be an entire, distinct sentence You may think it a quotation from some philosopher It is nothing of the sort. I got it up myself, it was evolved out of my own inwardness, and I think it sounds highish, entitling me to rank with such great minds as Train, Conkling and Capt Bunsby]

So stands Astoria to the whole Columbia river system; a full stop to the first paragraph in any chapter of travel out of that valley, to the great world beyond. If infinite wisdom planned that existence, undoubtedly infinite knowledge can say why it was done. Nothing short of that can venture more than a hazardous guess. I have dared some times to imagine that as certain birds were created to destroy certain insects and sharks to prevent the overcrowding of the seas with small fish, so Astoria may be a providential barrier against the dangerously rapid multiplication of salmon

It is the oddest place I have ever seen, there is no room for a town. There are some houses stuck up like swallows' nests against a wall. It smells of fish When a young man wants to walk out with the girl he sits up with, he asks her to come on deck

I observed certain trellises along the front of the plaza, over which a singular kind of vine was growing when I got near enough to examine the plants I discovered them to be fish seines Thus, I reasoned, we see a new evidence of the kindness of nature, nothing could have been more useful to this population than fish seines, nor more necessary, and here they are growing luxuriantly.

I repeated this reflection to a thoughtful-looking gentleman of Astoria in a clean black suit or hot glazed clothes and a white cravat, who said he had never looked at it in that light before, and that he should make it the subject of some remarks At the same time he related to me a curious custom of the Astorians to the effect that when the salmon season begins they all put on new "interior garments," as the Spanish say, which, owing to the dermoid penetration of fish bones, they are unable to change until fall, when, the season having passed, the bones dry and are shed or fall off

Four hundred passengers, ex-fishermen, came on board and made us a lively trip to San Francisco As a rule were musical Italians, and all were drunk and spread over the ship like fleas, we deferred sleep and other wasteful pursuits of that nature till we reached the Palace hotel.

Nothing new can be said of San Francisco nothing that has not been said before and is not known by every dweller on the Pacific coast

Blatant, flash town, loud and generous wears an outside shirt and a pig-tail sometimes Plenty of pig-tail outside and cock-tail inside. Overcoats in August, with Market street pavement streaked like a northeastern city in November What an infamous climate! And what a jolly town!

It would be hard to find a more delightful pleasure trip than the steamer voyage from San Francisco to Mexican ports, if one has the time for it. The ship is built for the best class of passenger accommodation, but is never crowded.

Many go to New York in the summer by this route to escape the suffering of a dusty railroad especially families with young children / The fare is less and there are no sleeping car or board bills to be reckoned.

I had a singular experience meeting men whom I had known in power in Central America, twelve years before, now banished and living in Frisco They were visiting coffee plantations in other states and still talked of the overthrow of Tomas Guardia as they have talked in all these years, looking for some prophet to arise and help them out

It has been a romantic history, that of Guardia in Costa Rica. When he seized the government Jesus Jimenez was president, a man of excellent character for probity and patriotism, an educated gentleman, a physician by profession whose kindness and assiduous attention to his patients I had occasion to experience when he was yet chief magistrate of the little republic.

In the city of San Jose, the capital, were two cuartels or barracks for the garrison of the city, into one of these, the cavalry barracks there drove each morning a few loads of alfalfa for horse feed The great doors of the zaguan swung open admitting the wagons, and one morning the clover in two of them rose on end disclosing sixteen armed men led by Tomas Guardia The garrison was taken after murdering a few half sleeping men the new commander was proclaimed, an officer and two soldiers visited Jesus Jimenez and told him to remain at home. Before night the republic was under the presidency of Guardia and has remained so, with trifling intermission, ever since.

He is an extremely illiterate man but intelligent audacious, and on the whole has been wise disturbing no one who is quiet, suffering no one who is otherwise.

How queerly things get mixed down there One morning, ten years ago while I was in San Jose an order was given by the president to take out a young revolutionist, one Mora, and shoot him dead Mora was a bright young fellow with a large family connection in the country who would have been made the mortal enemies of the president by this act He talked English perfectly, and was a special pet of the Americans. They interceded for him and suggested that as Guardia was about visiting the United States he should take the young malcontent along as his private secretary which was done After his return he got up another revolution was defeated and leaving the country was, at last accounts in San Francisco But now the funny part comes in A dozen years ago this young man being in my quarters one evening, I introduced him to a Doctor Montealegre, an ex-president of the republic who was visiting me They regarded each other with great dignity, and I saw there was blood in the young man's eye. He told me afterwards that man sir signed the death warrant of my uncle who had opposed him in an honorable revolution When I came down the coast I learned that the young gentleman no longer young is a guest at the house of the man whom he then hated

But what of all this gossip? It is a part of the trip down the coast which lasted till at the end of five days we reached Mazatlan

NEW AMERICAN LINE.

Proposed Fast Steamers of Original Design and with Two Propellers to Run from New York to Liverpool.

Charles L Wright & Co who are in the shipping business at No [illegible] Broadway are the agents and projectors of a proposed American steamship line between New York and Liverpool or some other European port They are now engaged in organizing a company to build at the domestic ship yards and run across the Atlantic iron and steel steamships [illegible] signs which it is said will [illegible] stability and comfort [illegible] ship as now constructed [illegible] Capt C G [illegible] borg is the inventor and naval [illegible] the designs have been patented [illegible] States and in Europe [illegible] steamships having a [illegible] 460 feet long [illegible] and a low water line [illegible] deck to bottom 23 feet [illegible] with four decks giving [illegible] tions to passengers The [illegible] and second decks [illegible] will be accommodated [illegible] height in the steerage [illegible] In the present style [illegible] length is as 20 [illegible] and steamers [illegible] The great breadth [illegible] as well as stability [illegible] the vessel are sharper [illegible] the ordinary steamer and [illegible] crease the speed It is proposed [illegible] propellers each driven by two compound [illegible] each developing 4500 horse power [illegible] 9000 horse power to each [illegible] 18000 horse power for the vessel With [illegible] [illegible] it is believed that the steamer will be able to make twenty knots an hour and the passage across the Atlantic in five and a half days This speed is four knots per hour greater than that made by the steamship Alaska in her fast [illegible] In order to make [illegible] pass [illegible] the [illegible] signal [illegible] for the proposed steamer the power of the Alaska would have to be doubled and this would be impossible [illegible]

[illegible] having two propellers [illegible] possible to make [illegible] the propeller shafts will run [illegible] [illegible] will always be submerged in water [illegible] the peculiar shape of the hull [illegible] the ship will [illegible] the best materials will be used in the construction of the vessel [illegible] and transverse will [illegible] is asserted will make the steamer practically unsinkable as well as giving her strength thus enabling her to use the full power of the engines The steamer will afford accommodation for 500 saloon and 1000 steerage passengers It is proposed to fit up the saloons and state rooms in American style with every modern improvement The peculiar design of the steamer will to a large degree prevent rolling and thus diminish the discomfort of an ocean voyage

The purpose is to run the line for passenger traffic almost entirely As the time between New York and Liverpool becomes shorter the passenger traffic grows greater It is now generally admitted that to run fast vessels for freight alone is unprofitable and if the regular ocean lines had been without the passenger traffic during the past year and had been obliged to rely upon the grain freights alone they would have withdrawn from the business As seventy five per cent of the ocean passengers are Americans it is believed to be possible to run an American fast line for Americans The steamers will however have a capacity for 2700 tons of coal and 500 tons of express freight such as butter cheese fruit oysters and all perishable commodities If there should be few or no steerage passengers from New York the freight capacity could be increased to 3000 tons The projectors assert however that unlike the present ocean steamers it will be unnecessary to carry freight or ballast to keep the vessel upright as in fact for stability increases as she rises in the water As the propellers act in solid water there is either an economy of power or an increase of speed The two propellers moreover act as an additional security to the vessel as if one should be broken the vessel could proceed with the other In order to run a weekly line between New York and Liverpool it will be necessary to construct three vessels only as the round passage could be easily made in twenty days allowing eleven days on the ocean and nine days in port

Messrs Wright & Co decline to give the names of those already pledged to support the enterprise on the ground that it would be premature to do so They have however every confidence in the success of the project

Of Sir Philip Crampton, the surgeon, the following anecdote is told by a correspondent of the Sun "The statue of William III in College Green, Dublin used to be decorated with orange lilies and ribbon by the Orangemen every 12th of July (the Boyne anniversary) to the great irritation of the Catholics On the night of one 12th the figure was blown from the horse by gun powder Frank Thorpe Porter, a police magistrate, who was very fond of a joke, happened to ride by and saw the king lying on the ground. It was two o'clock in the morning, but he galloped off to the house of Sir Philip Crampton the famous surgeon, in Merrion square, and rang the bell furiously "Tell Sir Philip" said he to the servant that a distinguished personage has fallen from his horse in College Green "Tell him to make haste" Sir Philip jumped out of bed seized his instrument case, and hurried off only to find King William dismounted He enjoyed the joke as much as any one

An exchange says that Prof Schiff the Florentine vivisector, has used up more than 14 000 dogs in his experiments If Prof Schiff will just bring his working tools and vivisecting room to America he will receive a welcome warmer and more cordial a thousand fold than has been extended to Oscar Wilson or Tug Wilde or Jumbo, or all three combined

One Consolation at Least.

In 1795 the United States navy used a code similar to the device invented by King James There were twenty six flags—one for each letter—and a number of pennants for special signals In 1816 the navy department adopted the method known as Rogers' American Code In 1857 and 1861 modifications were made The international code devised by the British government has been almost universally adopted with the exception of the United States A gunner in the United States navy by the name of Coston perfected a night system of signals the colors corresponding to the day flag

A LOST JEWEL.

Seth Allen, having graduated with the highest honors of his college class, and won the consent of Lisette May to become his wife, came to New York to take fame and fortune by storm with the air of his brilliant college reputation and sundry college poems, essays and such like stuff. He soon found his level, in a subordinate position in a large publishing establishment.

He began low, and won his way, by his increasing adaptability, to a high position. But it was a long and an arduous struggle, on small means and with the most exhausting labor. The marriage day seemed ever to recede, until he began to look upon it as almost hopeless.

By this time his sphere was so far removed from that of Lisette that she no longer influenced him. Seth Allen had the entree to the very highest circles of the metropolis—the elite of intelligence and culture. Here he met ladies whose conversation and social prestige quite eclipsed the simpler gifts of poor Lisette. Alas for her gentle heart, forsaken and despised.

With Lisette, the one fixed idea of years had been her marriage with her early lover. She had borne much neglect with ready excuses; she loved him singly and purely, and had never doubted. And so, when he wrote that [illegible] selfish letter, which was evidently intended to be so candid and so rational in all its details, in which he acknowledged that he no longer loved her as he once did, but was ready to fulfill his engagement, "because his honor was pledged, although the shock of it well nigh killed her she was disenchanted. There was a night of tears and desperate heartbreak; a morning that brought [illegible] thoughts with much womanly pride that dictated the words that alone he deserved, "You are free," and helped her to collect, with untrembling hands, every memento of his dead love, to be returned with that fateful missive.

A great shadow fell on her life, but she survived it. And after a very long time it passed away, leaving only a tender, unreproachful memory of the youth she had loved, and working entire for [illegible] of the man who had injured [illegible].

Years passed away, a score of them, since the time of parting. Seth Allen had long been a very famous man. Men spoke his name with a sort of awe, so high was he lifted up above the masses of mankind. Then at the very acme of [illegible] disease smote him fearfully. [illegible] that wasting, burning form in which death soon comes and welcomely [illegible] the scene of suffering, but in that [illegible] sapping of the springs of life, [illegible] of mental and bodily vigor, that [illegible] to follow a life of intense and [illegible] brain labor, such as Seth's had [illegible]. So smitten, and beyond the [illegible] of the pharmacopia, Seth [illegible] to yield to the mandates of [illegible], and seek rest and absolute [illegible].

He was homeless and without ties. It [illegible] natural that he should find his [illegible] turning toward the woman he [illegible] forgotten, the woman who [illegible] hoped would have created a [illegible] him and bound all his life and [illegible] in the sweet influence of her [illegible].

Having nothing to do, he was able to [illegible] he was permitted to do both [illegible] in his favorate pursuits. [illegible] the reason, probably, why [illegible] himself of a quiet journey [illegible] long-deserted scenes of his col[illegible] and successes.

[illegible] think of Lisette at all, and I [illegible] he did, it was as the same [illegible] simple girl who had given [illegible] heart and waited for him in [illegible] so long. He was a famous [illegible] and had become accustomed [illegible] welcomes. Why should [illegible] a welcome from this coun[illegible] whom he could not think of as [illegible] young creature, but whom [illegible] be far on the shady side [illegible] she would——

He always paused. Did he [illegible] he had but to ask and [illegible] back gracefully to his old [illegible] regard, to renew with the [illegible] advancing years a chilly [illegible] of the vows of youth, and [illegible] a valuable and most de[illegible] and housekeeper? Very [illegible] yet he was a man, a famous man whom long adulation [illegible] of his own overwhelming [illegible] whom sickness had made [illegible] selfish than was usual [illegible] extremely self-conscious [illegible].

He went down at commencement time, [illegible] Lisette, until the small [illegible] of the season had quite [illegible]. He asked no questions about [illegible] had not come in contact with [illegible] in whom he liked to re[illegible] of the past. But he called [illegible] cottage, where she still [illegible] her mother (that much he [illegible] from the stranger host of [illegible] he had his room), on [illegible] following the close of the [illegible] exercises, sure that he [illegible] find her at home.

[illegible] be mistaken. He was shown [illegible] small room, a sort of study, as [illegible] manuscripts scattered around [illegible], and waited long, con[illegible] all the time of a bustle, like the [illegible] of preparation for some approaching event, but which he naturally [illegible] to the departure of guests or [illegible] similarly connected with the [illegible].

Lisette came to him at last. A handsome, rather imposing lady, past middle age, but wearing well. A slight flush [illegible] the cheek that was still fair and [illegible], and that was all the sign of embarrassment that she betrayed. Not so [illegible] Allen. He stammered and stood [illegible] his ancient love abashed. She [illegible] so different from that which he had [illegible]. He felt sorry that he had lost [illegible]; he felt, for the first time the meanness of his conduct. He began to doubt if he should win her back.

In half an hour he went away with his [illegible] fully settled on that point. He [illegible] not only been rejected, but he carried in his pocket, tied together with the [illegible] white ribband, the cards of [illegible] and the Reverend Dr. ——, president of the college, to whom she was that evening to be united.

He had promised to stay for the wedding, and Lisette had shown him that a [illegible] friendship might be reared above the ashes of their long extinct love. But when the time came, he had not the courage to see her united to another, and the next morning he left the town, never to return. The remainder of his life was spent in the cold solitude that he had chosen in his younger years; but each year it became more irksome, and each convinced him that all his fame, and all his honors, could not compensate him for the jewel of domestic joy which, when he held it in his reach, he had deliberately cast from him forever.

The brightest of stars appear the most unsteady and tremulous in their light; not from any quality inherent in themselves, but from the imperfections of [illegible] in the surveyor.—[Plato.

A Monster Criminal.

The third trial of Wheeler in the San Francisco criminal court for choking his sister-in law to death has resulted in a verdict of murder in the first degree. This was probably the most horrible and revolting crime that had ever been committed in that murder stained city. The victim was a young girl about 19 years of age, a sister of Wheeler's wife, whom he had seduced at their residence in the east. Wishing to continue enjoyment of the criminal relations he proposed to remove to California and the project was acquiesced in by his wife for the purpose of concealing her misfortune and the infamy of her sister from their old father. Wheeler was the father of two children by this young girl. She did not love him but he terrorized her, as also his wife, to such an extent as to force them to aid in falsely representing that the young girl was his wife. In Sacramento the girl attracted the notice of a young man named Peckham to whom she confided her story. Peckham sought to marry and remove her from under the tyranny of this monster who, suspecting the intention, clandestinely removed the two women to San Francisco, taking lodgings on Kearney street. Peckham followed, traced them out and quietly took lodgings on the opposite side of the hall. Discovering the persistence of her young lover, Wheeler took the girl upon his lap, told her that he loved her too much to let her marry Peckham, kissed her cheek, laid her head back on his shoulder, and with his hands choked her to death, his real wife in the adjoining room being deaf and unable to hear the noise of the struggles. When she had ceased breathing, he opened a trunk and forced the girl's body into its small compass. It has taken three years for San Francisco to dispose of this monster, and yet the hangman's rope waits upon the intent.

The Matter with the Telephone.

"I doan' know vhat I shall do mit dat telephone of mine," observed a citizen as he entered the headquarters of the company yesterday and sat down in a discouraged way.

"Out of order, is it?"

"Sometimes it vhas, und sometimes it vhas all right. If I go to speak mit der coal man, or der City Hall, or der butcher, it vhas all right, und I can hear every word. If somepody vhants to order my peer, I get de name shust as plain as daylight."

"And when does it fail?"

"Vhell, shust like two hours ago. A saloon man he owes me $18, und I rings him oop und calls out, "Hello! hello! I likes my monish to-day!" Den he vhants to know who I am, und he says he can't catch der name. I tell him oafer and oafer, and by und by he calls oot dot he doan' deal in watermelons, und dat he goes in to pave Gratiot street, und dot he is sorry he can't sign my petition to der Council. Den I haf to go all oafer und he tells me to stand ba k, und to come closer, und to speak louder, und at last he gits mad und tells me dot if I call him a dandy again he'll proke my head. It's no use—I can't make one of my customers hear me. If sometings doan' ail all my telephone, it may be ash my voice is giving out. I vhish you would examine me und see if I had better let my son Shon do der talking vhile I keep der pooks."—[Detroit Free Press.

THE PROFESSIONAL MOVER.—We stopped the first night at a large, handsome house out of all proportion in size to the little patch of a farm around it. The owner kept a country store and entertained teamsters and travelers. Near by a family of movers were camped for the night, their canvas-covered wagon, serving as house and home, standing by the roadside, the wife cooking the supper over a brush-wood fire, the husband sitting on a log smoking his pipe, and four children and two dogs tumbling about in the grass. These people belonged to a class of which I met many other representatives in the course of the journey. Nomads by disposition, they rarely live long in one place. They go from California to Oregon because California is too dry, and a year or so later will be found going back to California because Oregon is too wet. Much of their lives is spent upon the road. They seem always to be looking for a better place further on. A storekeeper told me that the migrations of these peculiar people along the wagon road connecting California and Oregon were almost as regular as those of the wild geese. When a family passed north in the spring he expected them back in the fall, or at the farthest the next year. The wonder is how they manage to subsist and how they replace their raw boned teams when they die by the way.

THE SAND MAN.

There's a funny old fellow, so I heard say,
Who comes along at the close of day,
With a big, big bag on his shoulders borne,
And a shadow mantle about him flung.
Now the funniest part of the story, dears,
Is this, that nobody ever hears
The old man's footsteps, so quiet is he,
And the queer old self nobody can see.

But what do you think he comes to do?
O little ones, grey-eyed, brown-eyed or blue!
He sprinkles sand on your eyelids white
As soon as 'tis time to say good night.
And the dear little eyes, so heavy they grow
They droop and at last close tight, you must know,
And, wrapping his mantle around you fast,
He carries you off to dream at last.

Would you know the name of this wonderful man?
Ask nurse to tell you if she can.
Long ago, my darlings, when I, like you,
Was a golden-haired child, with eyes of blue,
He came to me with the twilight gray
And made me weary at last of play.
Just as he comes to my own little one
Even now, when the long, long day is done.

CHERRIE' CHICKEN PIE.

In the great family bible her name was written Charity Stowe Bascomb. That had been her grandmother's name, and a good one it was; but, somehow, it did not suit the bright-eyed and rosy-lipped little girl who had come to be the sunshine of the pretty prarie home. So it happened that Charity grew into Cherrie, Cherrie Ripe, Cherrie Red and a dozen other queer names for a little girl.

And now I am going to tell you how Cherrie once helped grandma make a chicken pie for Thanksgiving dinner. There was to be a great deal of company at the old homestead that year. Uncle John and Aunt Hattie were coming from California; Uncle Edward from Vermont, and Uncle Frank, with the new Auntie Bell the children had never seen, beside other uncles and aunties and cousins, who lived not so far away. For many days beforehand everybody was as busy as could be, for grandpa had said:

"Let us have a real old-fashioned Thanksgiving, such as we used to have in New England. It is a long time since all the children have been at home together."

Cherrie never forgot those days. It seemed to her as if the whole world was changing into good things to eat. There were such rows of fat chickens, turkeys, geese and ducks, nicely dressed, hanging in the cellarway; such long lines of pies upon every shelf in the pantry and closets; such pans full of doughnuts, cookies and ginger-snaps; such loaves of cake, brown bread, graham bread, rye bread and wheat bread; such baskets of apples of every kind and color, rubbed bright and shining and ready to be "passed around" evenings with nuts and cider; in a word, such quantities of everything you can think of that Cherrie's eyes grew rounder and brighter than ever, just from looking at them! But her cup of joy fairly ran over when mamma said on the last afternoon:

"Mother, I want you should make the chicken pie to-morrow."

"La, no!" said grandma, laying down her knitting, which looked like a red mitten about the right size for Cherrie. "My eyes are not as bright as they were once. You'd better make it, Lucy."

But she looked pleased all the same, and when mamma said: "No mother. It wouldn't be your pie, and we all want that," she laughed a soft little laugh, and, looking over the top of her spectacles, said:

"Cherrie must help me, then, and be my eyes."

"Oh, grandma! May I really help?" cried Cherrie, springing up and clapping her hands with delight.

"Yes, child, to be sure you may," answered grandma, and Cherrie danced away, the happiest little girl in the world.

The next morning, when she opened her eyes, the first thing she thought of was the wonderful chicken pie she was going to help make. She jumped out of bed and dressed very quickly, never minding the cold. For Jack Frost had come to get his Thanksgiving dinner, too, and he pinched Cherrie's nose and fingers and toes as his way of saying, "How do you do?"

Just after breakfast mamma said: "Cherrie, I wish you could go up to my bureau drawer—the lower one—and bring me down that long, green box in the corner. We shall need all those spoons and yours, too, I guess, mother," she added speaking to grandma, as she carefully wiped the best china cups.

Cherrie ran up stairs, very proud of her mission. Mamma's bureau drawers were charmed places, full of all sorts of pretty things, and it was seldom she caught a glimpse of them. And now to think that she had been sent to bring the spoons with her own hands! The rosy cheeks grew crimson, and she drew a long breath of delight as she carefully pulled open the drawer. Slowly she lifted the green box and set it upon the bureau. Then, I hardly know how, the fat little fingers, instead of pushing in the drawer, very softly raised the lid of another box—a brown one—and the bright eyes peeped within it. There, upon a bed of cotton lay several rings, a locket and some pretty little trinkets.

Cherrie looked at them and thought very fast. How much she had always wanted a ring ever since her dearest friend and playmate, Julia Grey, had hers, with its round pink stone! How easy it would be to take one of those and wear it just for the day; turning the stone in until after dinner, and then showing it to Julia and putting it back so mamma would never know.

"But your mamma has forbidden you to touch anything in her drawers without leave," whispered a soft little voice in her ear.

"She did give me leave to come here," answered Cherrie's naughty heart, while her cheeks grew redder than ever.

"Not to take a ring," the gentle voice went on. "Suppose you should lose it?"

All this time Cherrie had been trying on one after the other; one after the other they all slipped off—all but one. This, the very prettiest, with its cluster of white sparkling stones, fitted the plump finger better than the rest, although it was rather large.

"Cherrie! Cherrie!" cried mamma from the foot of the stairs, "come right down! Grandma's all ready for you!"

Cherrie gave a great start.

"Yes'm," she called back faintly; "I'm coming."

Another long minute she stood twisting the pretty, shining ring about; then she slammed down the box cover, shoved in the drawer, caught up the box of spoons and hurried down to the kitchen.

For the next half-hour she was very busy getting out the rolling-pin, and salt-box, sifting flour, running down cellar and doing all she could to help grandma. At last the great tin pan had been lined with crust, the pieces of chicken laid cosily around inside, and a supply of rich gravy poured over them. Just as the upper crust was about being laid on, Cherrie spied a tiny black speck floating around.

"Oh, grandma! Wait a minute till I take it out," she cried, catching up a spoon.

"I said you'd have to be my eyes," said grandma, pinching down the crust and fixing on the "top-knot."

In a few minutes more the pie was in the oven, and grandma went away to lie down awhile before dinner. Aunts and uncles had begun to arrive, and mamma was busy with them. So Cherrie stole softly into the dining-room to look at the table. It was a long one, and looked very pretty with all the old-fashioned china and bright silver. From the spoons, in which Cherry could see her own face, funnily broadened and twisted, her thoughts and eyes went suddenly to the ring upon her finger. And then her heart seemed to jump into her throat, for there was no ring to be seen. Rub her eyes and stare as hard as she could, her finger was still bare. For the rest of the morning there was a very unhappy and frightened little girl in Cherrie's pleasant home. She wandered about from room to room, keeping out of sight as much as possible, and looking furtively in every corner where the ring might possibly have rolled.

Once mamma stopped her in a quick passing through the hall, not liking the looks of her flushed cheeks. She laid her cool hands upon them, stooping as she did so to kiss the soft curly head.

"Mother's afraid you worked too hard over the pie, Cherrie, dear. Run up to my room and bathe your face before dinner."

For an instant Cherrie longed to throw her arms around mamma's neck and sob out her sad story, but something seemed to hold her tongue, and just then the Auntie Bel came out from the parlor, and so Cherrie rushed away more wretched than ever after her mother's loving words.

At last dinner was ready, and Cherrie found herself seated about half way down the side of the long table. There was a great deal of merry chatter while the good things with which the table was crowded were being passed around. Everybody praised grandma's chicken pie, and said that it would not seem like Thanksgiving without mother's pie." Then Auntie Bel told them how Cherrie had helped to make it, and they all looked so kindly at her and praised her for being such a good little girl, until poor Cherrie longed to run away and hide her guilty face.

Just then Uncle Edward laid down his knife and fork quite suddenly, and took a queer looking little object out of his mouth.

"Diamonds, as I live!" he cried, turning it around, while all looked at him in surprise. "Rather expensive chicken feed, I should say," he added, lifting his eyebrows comically.

The ring was passed around the table amid a chorus of guessings as to where it came from, and how it could possibly have got there. When mamma caught sight of the pretty sparkling ring, she knew in a moment that it was her own, and she was more mystified than ever. Then she remembered her little Cherrie's flushed face and strange manner. She glanced down the table, and the pale cheeks and downcast eyes she now saw told the whole story plainer than words. She said nothing, however, and every one kept wondering over the appearance of a diamond ring in a chicken pie. All at once Cherrie sprang up, crimson with shame and embarrassment, but speaking out bravely.

"I can't stand it any longer," she cried. "It is mamma's ring, and I took it out of her box to wear it to-day, and it must have dropped into the pie. Oh mamma! mamma!"

Her voice had trembled, then been choked with sobs, and then she never knew how she got there, but she found herself in mamma's arms, being kissed and soothed as only mamma could do it.

"I am glad my little daughter had the courage to confess her wrong," mamma said, passing her hand over the soft curls.

"That was the worst of it," said Cherrie, smiling happily, now that her burden had rolled away—"keeping it all to myself, and knowing how naughty I had been when you thought I was good."

Presently she went back to her place, and every one was so pleasant and kind that she had a nice dinner after all. A mountain seemed lifted from her heart, and she told mamma that night, when they had a little talk after she was snugly tucked in bed, that she would rather Julia should have all the rings in the world than to feel again as she had done that day.

And now you know the story of Cherrie's chicken pie.

TO THE PUBLIC.

It is generally conceded that the enterprise began in this city about five years ago, and known as the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE, has met with a success unparalleled in the mercantile history of this State, and almost prodigious in its nature.

The cause underlying this success is not questioned any longer. It is simply this: The people of Oregon having for so long a time been the victims of grasping and unscrupulous dealers, having for so many years been ground under the iron heel of an avaricious guild, have at last had their eyes opened to the fact that their dollar, no less than anybody else's, is worth one hundred cents, and ought, by right, purchase as much as if in the hands of the merchant.

To the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE is due the credit of having released the people from the oppressive yoke, of having redeemed them from their thraldom, and of having enlightened them upon a point so vital to their prosperity. This vexes those merchants who are unable to keep pace with the march of time, who are loth to accommodate themselves to smaller profits, and who never forget anything, because they never learn anything, and they cannot help themselves. They are spotted; the people have put the mark on them, while the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE has become the household word in every family in the State, and is to them synonymous with honesty, integrity and fair dealing.

To take advantage of the fair fame of which the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE has a right to boast, is something from which their competitors do not shrink. Their sense of honor does not deter them from stooping so low, and consequently it often occurs that when a party, for the first time in this city, happens to fall in their clutches, he is made to believe, when asking for the FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE, that he is just in the place he is looking for. By every device, chicanery and false representation he is thus deceived. This has occurred so often that the undersigned, proprietor of the above mentioned place, finds himself compelled to notify those who have so long subsisted upon this disreputable practice, that unless they cease their tactics, he will, though reluctantly, seek redress through the proper channel. He has, in accordance with the provisions of the law of the State, delivered to and had recorded in the office of the Secretary of State, the words "FARMERS AND MECHANICS' STORE," as a TRADE MARK, to be used as a sign and designation to his store. The undersigned does not propose to submit to an infringement upon his rights any longer. He is not for a moment so philanthropic as to quietly allow others to reap the benefit of his labor, and, above all, suffer his customers to be thus imposed upon. He therefore again warns and notifies all persons so using his Trade Mark in the future, that he will hold them strictly responsible for the same and prosecute them to the extent of the law, which provides as follows:

"Any person, partnership, firm or corporation that shall use, or cause to be used, any name, mark, brand, designation or description, the same as or SIMILAR to one so secured or recorded, for the purpose of deception or profit, shall forfeit to the use of the owner of the name, mark or brand, designation or description, so taken or imitated, one-half of the property, goods or articles of trade upon which the same may be used or placed, or the value thereof, to be recovered by the said owner in any court having jurisdiction of the subject matter."—Code of Oregon, Sec. 3, Chapter xxxiii, Miscellaneous Laws; page 659.

DECISION IN U S CIRCUIT COURT BY DEADY J

U S Circuit Court District of Oregon

[illegible] October [illegible]

Asahel Bush & William [illegible] v the United States [illegible] No [illegible]

(1) Bill of Review—[illegible] a bill [illegible] by [illegible] a decree given in a suit in equity in favor of the United States for error apparent upon the face thereof.

(2) [illegible]—Service of subpœna [illegible] a bill of review in favor of the United States the subpœna to appear and answer may be served on the district attorney.

(3) Qui tam action [illegible] of the R S [illegible] In an action brought [illegible] §§ 3490 [illegible] of the R S [illegible] damages and forfeiture for [illegible] collecting false claims from the treasury the person who sues [illegible] the United States [illegible] and proceedings therein [illegible] taken in his name [illegible] for [illegible] judgment therein and has [illegible] control [illegible] same.

DEADY J

On August 1 1882 the plaintiffs filed in this court a bill of review to procure as to them the modification of a final decree [illegible] in the case No 3 [illegible] of the United States v William C Griswold and others including said plaintiffs and signed and enrolled on August 12 1881 for error apparent upon the face thereof

The bill of review states that on January 29 1880 the amended bill was filed by the United States in the original suit and sets it forth in full

From this among other things it appears that on May 27 1877 the United States by B F Dowell informant brought an action against W C Griswold under §§3490 and 5438 of the R S to recover certain damages and forfeitures for knowingly collecting from the treasury of the United States on January 11 1879 false claims to the amount of $17 000 in which on July 30 1879 the plaintiff obtained judgment for $35 228 and costs and disbursements amounting to $2821 60 that said Griswold at the date of said judgment was the owner of certain real property situate in Salem Or including the west half of lots 1 2 and 4 of block 73 and lot 8 in block 10 which had been illegally sold and purchased by the plaintiffs herein upon certain judgments held by them against said Griswold contrary to the priority of the United States and asked to have said proceedings set aside and the property sold and the proceeds applied upon the aforesaid judgment of the United States v Griswold

By the final decree it was provided so far as the plaintiffs herein are concerned, that the property aforesaid should be sold by the master of this court, and the proceeds applied first to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's liens thereon and the remainder, if any upon the judgment of the United States

In the bill of review it is alleged that the United States had no right to priority of payment out of this property and, therefore the decree so far as it provides for its sale and the disposition of the proceeds is erroneous

On August 2d the subpœna issued upon the bill of review was served on Mr James F Watson, the U S. district attorney, together with a copy of the bill and a notice from the plaintiffs, to the effect that the bill had been filed for the purpose so far as they are concerned of procuring a reversal of the decree of August 12, 1881, and requiring him to appear and answer said bill, on the first Monday in September, 1882, or judgment thereon will be taken for the want of an answer "

On September 4, the district attorney filed a motion to dismiss the bill for the reasons following (1) That the United States "cannot be sued herein without its consent " and that it has not nor does not consent "to be made a party herein ;" (2) No process has or can be served on the United States by which it has been or can be brought as a defendant into this court, " and (3), This court neither has nor can acquire " jurisdiction over the United States herein."

The motion to dismiss has been argued by counsel without any question being raised as to this mode of making the objection to the jurisdiction of the court

It is well understood that the United States cannot be sued unless with its own consent and that it has not given such consent except in a few instances of which this is not one. U S. v Eckford 6 Wall 487.

But an auxiliary or supplemental proceeding against the United States, growing out of an action instituted by it is not generally considered a suit against the United States in that sense. Therefore a writ of error to reverse a judgment obtained by the United States may be sued out and prosecuted by the defendant therein

The proceeding by this writ, though technically a new action brought to set aside the judgment in the old one, and it may be to recover what was lost by it, is nevertheless regarded from this standpoint as one in which the United States is not thereby brought into court to answer the claim of the plaintiff in error without its consent, but rather one by which it is continued in court for the purpose of contesting the allegations of error in an action voluntarily instituted there by itself

Now, a bill of review, particularly as in this case, when it is brought for error in law apparent upon the face of the decree, is in the nature of a writ of error (Sto E P § 403 et seq) Indeed the former has the same scope and purpose in a suit in equity that the latter has in an action at law "to procure an examination and alteration or a reversal of a decree made upon a formal bill" between the same parties (Id § 403)

No case has been cited by counsel in which this question has been directly considered

United States v Atherton, 102 U S 372 was a suit to set aside a decree of the district court of California confirming a claim under the act for the settlement of private land claims in that state

But this decree was given upon a bill of review brought by the grantee of the claimant against the United States four years after the court had by a former and first decree rejected the claim No question seems to have been made as to the jurisdiction of the district court to give a decree upon a bill of review against the United States, and Mr Justice Miller, in the consideration of the case, said "It is not denied by counsel nor can it well be doubted that the district court had jurisdiction by bill of review to set aside and correct the former decree "

In the cases of the United States v Lemore (4 How 326) and Hill et al v U S (9 How 386) it was held that the defendant in a judgment obtained by the United States could not maintain a suit to enjoin the latter from enforcing the same, upon the ground that the United States could not be sued without its consent,

But in the subsequent case of Freeman v Howe et al (24 How 460) it was held that "a bill filed on the equity side of the court to restrain or regulate judgments or suits at law in the same court and thereby prevent injustice or an inequitable advantage under mesne or final process is not an original suit but auxiliary and dependent supplementary merely to the original suit out of which it had arisen and is maintained without reference to the citizenship or residence of the parties

This statement of the law seems to be in conflict with the ruling in the cases of the U S v Lemore and Hill et al v U S supra for if the court has jurisdiction of such auxiliary suit without reference to the citizenship or residence of the parties it must be because having acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties in the original suit it does not thereafter lose it because at some subsequent stage of the litigation before it the exigency of its legal procedure requires the parties to change positions as plaintiff and defendant

And with like reason if the court acquires jurisdiction in an action in which the United States is plaintiff it must retain that jurisdiction so long as the litigation may properly be continued before it according to the usual course of procedure therein

True the United States is a sovereign and cannot be sued in its own courts without its consent but when it [illegible] into court as a suitor it must submit to the usual course of procedure therein at least so far as may be necessary to enable the defendant to maintain his rights

A Bill of Review is an established mode of proceeding in a court of equity by which the defendant [illegible] against him [illegible] review [illegible] that [illegible] made of [illegible] of the original suit

We [illegible] United States [illegible] of the [illegible] which [illegible] that [illegible] not [illegible] maintain the [illegible] the decree against them and the next question is [illegible] shall the United States [illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] In Cummings [illegible] in the [illegible] States [illegible] this [illegible] practice [illegible] In the English Chancery in the case of [illegible] stay of proceedings at law or a cross bill of the plaintiff in the action at law or the original bill was [illegible] was upon motion of the plaintiff [illegible] service of the subpœna to be made upon the attorney [illegible] in his absence [illegible] Smith's Chan 116 60 And a necessity of the same practice prevails in the National courts when the plaintiff in the action at law or the original bill is a non resident of the State where the court is held [illegible] Cook's Prac 181 [illegible] Thomas v [illegible] Bl C C 15 Kamm v Stark 1 Saw [illegible] 10 and cases there cited

But when the United States is the party to be served it being known that it cannot be served personally at any place I think the process may be served on its attorney at once without any previous direction from the court

My conclusion is that the service of the subpœna to appear and answer upon the attorney for the United States is proper and sufficient

A question was made in the course of the argument as to who is the attorney of the United States in this case

The judgment in the action at law to recover the damages and forfeiture under §§ 3490 [illegible] of the R S is the foundation of this litigation That action was brought by B F Dowell in the name of the United States as well for himself as it and at his own expense The statute authorizing him to bring it gave him the control of it except that he could not dismiss it without the consent of the judge and the district attorney

In effect this made him the representative of the United States so far as that litigation is concerned The subsequent suit in equity to subject certain property of the defendant in that action to the satisfaction of the judgment therein was an incident of such action It was brought in the name of the United States apparently by the district attorney at least the bill is signed by him as such and it is [illegible] alleged therein that B F Dowell sues for himself and the United States [illegible] The bill is also signed by Dowell as [illegible] for the United States

Both Dowell and the United States are interested in the judgment obtained in the action at law—one half the principal and all the costs belonging to the former He also has the right I think to institute and control all proper suits and proceedings in the name of the United States to enforce such judgment for their joint benefit

His signature to the bill as solicitor is an assertion that he is acting as attorney for the United States in the premises but being there in company with, if not in subordination to that of the district attorney may be construed to be an admission that he consents to the United States conducting or joining in the conduct of the suit by its ordinary attorney—the attorney for the district of Oregon

Upon this theory of the case the United States has two attorneys in the suit, wherein the decree is sought to be reviewed by this bill —the ordinary one and a special one And it may be that both ought to be served with the subpœna But as the district attorney must have come into the case with the consent of if not at the solicitation of Dowell, I think he may be considered for the time being as the attorney for both Dowell and the United States

The motion to dismiss is not allowed
